The new library website’s “Research Help” menu provides a number of resources to assist students and faculty with research. This menu, found at the bar on the top of the screen, includes self-service information on:

- Finding material in the library
- Using the library’s databases
- Troubleshooting access issues
- Citing sources
- Understanding and practicing basic research concepts, such as choosing a topic, identifying scholarly sources, understanding and evaluating information, distinguishing between primary and secondary sources, recognizing quantitative and qualitative research methods, and avoiding plagiarism.
- Exploring more advanced aspects of scholarly communication (i.e., copyright, publication, etc.).

Additionally, links are provided to in-person assistance available via the Academic Projects Center, the Ask a Librarian online chat service (the widget is also found on most pages), or librarian subject specialists.

For more information, please contact your subject librarian.
